

4th International CSR/COM Conference
Vienna, September 21-23, 2017

CSR & Communication: Meeting the Challenges and Generating Impact

CALL FOR PAPERS

Conference introduction

After three very successful conferences, in 2011 (Amsterdam), 2013 (Aarhus), and 2015 (Ljubljana) the time has come to invite you to a 4th CSR COM CONFERENCE to be hosted by the Austrian Academy of Sciences, University of Vienna, and Alpen-Adria-University Klagenfurt held in September, 21-23, 2017 in Vienna (Austria).

In academia, CSR communication has developed into a transdisciplinary field of research focusing on the 'communicative elements' of CSR concepts: The increased number of theoretical concepts as well as academic research is represented in the literature. In practice, enterprises strive to integrate themselves more and more into society by means of communication, and vice versa, society interrelates with enterprises through communicative processes. In that regard, CSR communication is understood as a "holistic communicative approach" dealing with today's societal challenges organizations are facing. With high levels of sensitivity of various stakeholders to social and environmental issues attention given to CSR and communicating about it has reached top-level importance in nearly all types of organizations.

In the light of increased importance of CSR on the one hand but also skepticism on the other, transparent and credible CSR communication is ever more important and challenging. It is a balancing act between the interests of the organization and the interests and expectations of its varied stakeholders as it includes anticipating stakeholder expectations, articulating CSR policy and managing different communication tools to provide true and transparent information about a company's integration of its business operations, social and environmental concerns, and interactions with stakeholders. Thus, communication practices themselves are meant to be "responsible" as well.

CSR communication has to be managed by organizations in view of the fact that stakeholders become better informed and are also more involved and more eager to participate in shaping CSR discourses. This is to a large extent done using social media. Hence, organizations must acknowledge this widened communication sphere and learn to embrace the different voices to improve their CSR practices and their CSR communication. Engaging in dynamic stakeholder dialogues appears a promising and demanding avenue to take. Thus, the range of "CSR communication" starts with values like transparency and the reporting of CSR activities and sustainable behavior, but it goes far beyond reporting in the sense of stakeholder engagement, dialogue and public participation as well as organizational behavior and internal CSR as sensemaking and sensegiving.

Targeted at academics and practitioners, the conference organizers seek to enable a cooperative, constructive and creative setting for all interested in CSR communication; the two day conference will provide a wonderful opportunity for academics and professionals to network, discuss, debate and exchange ideas and viewpoints in beautiful Vienna, which has been repeatedly voted in the TOP 3 of world's best cities to live in.

We invite scholars, practitioners and researchers with various approaches to CSR communication to submit their empirical and conceptual work on the broad theme of CSR & communication to participate in this unique event in the historical and vibrant city of Vienna. Relevant topics include, but are not restricted to, the following:

- Empowering through CSR
- CSR and stakeholder dialogue
- CSR and sustainability reporting
- Different aspects of "CSR washing"
- Consumer, marketing and branding aspects of CSR
- CSR in social media context
- Environmental aspects of CSR
- Tools and strategies for communicating CSR
- CSR communication best practices
- SME perspectives on CSR communication
- Internal and external aspects of CSR communication
- International and organizational aspects and comparisons of CSR communication
- CSR as micropolitics
- Theories related to CSR communication

Pre-conference event: PhD seminar for students in Corporate and CSR Communication

A special seminar/workshop for Ph.D. students will also be organized and will take place on September 20-21, 2017. The seminar will be dedicated both to corporate and CSR communication themes; PhDs will present their work and experts from the field will give inputs and research advice not only on the students' work but further more on the conference topic. More information for PhD students will be available on the conference website.

Conference submissions

In collaboration with "Corporate Communications: an International Journal", we invite academic researchers and educators, particularly in the field of Corporate Communication, Marketing, Management and Organizational Studies, as well as practitioners seeking and working with information and knowledge on CSR communication to participate in dialogue and set trends at the conference.

With this call for papers, scholars are asked to submit either a short structured abstract (250 words) or a proposal for a special session for review. This conference and the subsequent special issue of "Corporate Communications: An International Journal" which will be attached to the conference will consider both theoretical and empirical competitive papers for review.

Authors with accepted abstracts will present their papers at the conference. All accepted papers will appear in the conference proceedings, either as a structured research summary or as the submitted short abstract. At the conference, the most positively reviewed research summary will be solemnly presented a best paper award.

By submitting an abstract to the conference authors agree to participate in the peer review process.
